The Rheba Sutton WHITE CHAPEL

Venue History

Our venues' histories date back to the late 1800s when the area was first settled by J.C. Craver and called Sutherland, today known as Ozona.

In the early 1900s a local hotel that housed seminary students was converted to Southern College - the southernmost college in the United States at the time. In 1921, a fire destroyed significant portions of the campus; then a hurricane and another fire in 1922 forced its move to its current home in Lakeland, FL.

The chapel was built in 1924 with handmade salvaged bricks from the college grounds and became a house of prayer for the Palm Harbor United Methodist Church. It served its church community until the 1970s and then it served Palm Harbor as its first library and then as a local food pantry.

In 1999, as part of a downtown revitalization, Pinellas County acquired the property and used a state grant to restore the building to its former splendor. Completely refurbished and modernized, The Rheba Sutton White Chapel together with the adjacent Harbor Hall was dedicated in 2003.

Since 1924, this Palm Harbor landmark has been a beacon of community, family and love.
